DID YOU KNOW?

- Mangosteen is indigenous to Southeast Asia and must be carefully cultivated under perfect conditions to maximize its nutritional value. Mangosteen fruit contains 50 identified xanthones, the majority of which are found in the pericarp of the fruit. Xanthones are active plant phenols with powerful antioxidants. Xanthones have earned mangosteen the nickname "The Queen of Fruit."
- Bioflavonoids, also known simply as flavonoids, are found in mangosteen. They are compounds responsible for the vivid coloring in fruits, vegetables, and herbs. They have major health benefits and antioxidant properties. Catechins and proanthocyanidins are two bioflavonoids present in significant amounts in mangosteen fruit.
- Mangosteen has its own natural defense against pests, which includes excreting yellow latex to smother any predators. Because of this, no pesticides are used on the crop and no other chemical treatments are used during the harvest.
- Protected by patent 8,524,285.
